Celebrating more than 10 Years of Success

The Foundation for the History of Women in Medicine, established in 1998, was founded with the belief that knowing the historical past is a powerful force in shaping the future. Though relatively young, the Foundation for the History of Women in Medicine has made significant accomplishments in promoting the history of women in medicine through the Alma Dea Morani Award recognizing nationally the leadership of outstanding women in medicine, through the creation of a research fellowship currently hosted at The Countway Library at Harvard Medical School, and through our newly developed oral history program. Due to the foresight and generosity of one of our women in medicine, The Foundation has been able to support medical student scholarships through the Maria Cerny Brabb Scholarship.

*A special thank you to our host the Archives for Women in

The Archives for Women in Medicine is a project of the Countway Library and the Harvard Medical School/Harvard School of Dental Medicine's Joint Committee on the Status of Women. The AWM's goal is to recognize outstanding medical leaders, and to document the social phenomena that brought large numbers of women to the forefront of medicine. The AWM's objective is to actively acquire, process, preserve, provide access to, and publicize the papers of women physicians, researchers, and medical administrators.
